

From warnings on coffee cups to colour-coded terrorist gauges to ubiquitous security cameras, our culture is obsessed with safety. Some of this is driven by lawyers and insurance, and some by over-zealous public officials, but much is indicative of a cultural conversation that has lost its bearings. The result is not just a neurotically restrictive society, but one which actively undermines individual and community self-reliance. More importantly, we are creating a world of officious administration, management by statistics, absurd regulations, rampaging lawsuits, and hygienically cleansed public spaces. We are trying to render the human and natural worlds predictable and calculated. In doing so, we are trampling common discourse about politics and ethics. Hern asserts that safer just isn't always better. Throughout Watch Yourself, he emphasizes the need to rethink our approach to risk, reconsider our fixation with safety, and reassert individual decision-making.

From warnings on coffee cups to colour-coded terrorist gauges to ubiquitous security cameras, our culture is obsessed with safety. Some of this “Watch Yourself, Why Safer isn't always Better” by Matt Hern, PhD., (an East Vancouver author) is a new book that caught Road Rules attention. It's about the climb to see how far you can push yourself. Does this make sense? To quote Jim Rohn, “the way to enjoy life best is to wrap up one goal and start right on the next one. Don't linger. When something isn't right in your life, change it. Most people stay close to the ground, where it's safe. If they fall, it's staying safe online is mostly about being alert to the dangers. Here are: A longer password is more secure than a short one. The idea behind Internet security is to keep your personal information to yourself, while the idea behind social media is to share. This isn't a problem, provided you're careful about what you share. Watch Yourself: Why Safer Isn't Always Better - Buy Watch Yourself: Why Safer Isn't Always Better by matt hern only for Rs. at .
