

There is No Night

Poetry was always a natural thing to me, part of letter-writing and simply another way of responding to the world. Thus the author prefaces this substantial new collection of poems, in strict form and in free verse, including a number published previously - in The Counting Stick, A Share of the Wind, and Amoretti, all published by Aquila Press, or in anthologies and magazines - some of them re-appearing here with revisions. Informing this fresh view of his work are three of his fathers Six Sea Poems. The collection is introduced by Alan Riach, who describes the world John Purser makes for us in his poems, as in his music and his scholarship as archipelagic, characterised by diversity and depths, bright sunlit perceptions and profundities of insight into the nature of the earth itself, and as far out as the music of the spheres permits us

There is no night without a dawning There are actually six places related only to day and nothing to do with night. Dont we all have those days when we wish the day never ends.
